Back your local high street and vote with your feet

By Marijke Cox

marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

THE soaring number of online shoppers and growing popularity of out-of-town shopping centres are driving the nail in the coffin for our high streets.

And it's down to you to help stop the rot as retail chiefs say it's a case of "use it, or lose it".

In a bid to breathe life into the ailing high street this Christmas, we're calling on you to spread some festive joy and help put a smile back on the faces of independent traders.

Town centres are at the heart of the community and without them that traditional Christmas spirit will be lost to generic out-of-town shopping centres.

Cabinet member for economic growth at Medway Council, Jane Chitty, said: "Our wonderful range of independent traders and small businesses are vital to our area and help to make Medway such a vibrant, buzzing place."

"I would urge people to keep it local and support them as they are at the heart of our local community."

"Christmas is an important time for all our local traders and if people make a commitment to shop locally they will help them, help the local economy and help the local area."

Chief executive of Kent Invicta Chamber of Commerce Jo James said Christmas represented the most important time of year for retailers and this year was especially crucial.

NO CHANGE: The top five boy's names remained the same as 2011, according to council figures

STATISTICS

NAMES WITH STYLES

THE name Harry has topped the baby charts once again, after the council published figures on the area's favourite newborn names.

And although the top five names remain the same in the boys' charts compared to last year, the girls' table sees a new leader – with Amelia heading the way.

More than 5,000 babies are expected to be registered in Medway by the end of 2012, and there is debate as to why the name Harry still remains trendy.

There is some talk that the success of the Diamond Jubilee celebrations has led to its continuing popularity, whereas others suspect boy band One Direction's lead singer Harry Styles may be behind the monicker's success.

Isla, Isabelle, Sophia and Ava all entered the girls' top 10 for the first time.

CRIME

Arrests after police attack

A MAN and a woman have been arrested in connection with an assault on two off-duty police officers.

The incident took place on a high-speed train between Gillingham and Rainham last Tuesday night.

Both were left with facial injuries following the attack.

POLITICS

Chishti raises marriage fear

A TORY MP has said he is not convinced by equal marriage proposals set out by the Government.

Gillingham MP Rehman Chishti said there was no need to develop the rights of a civil partnership any further.

He said: "I do not support any redefinition of marriage."

SPORT

Rugby league side to return

PRIESTFIELD will play host to rugby league side London Broncos again next summer.

After playing in Gillingham this year, the team will be back in Medway for a game against Warrington Wolves on June 8.

Gills chairman Paul Scally said he was "delighted".

EDUCATION

Council handed lesson after poor primary school results

MEDWAY Council has admitted more needs to be done to improve education standards, after the local authority was ranked bottom in England's primary school league table.

Figures released by the Department for Education revealed only 72 per cent of children achieved the minimum Level Four target in maths and English by the age of 11.

The data published shows how more than 14,000 primary schools fared in national curriculum tests.

It's the third year in which Medway has been ranked bottom of the pile, although figures have shown gradual increases year-on-year.

Chatham and Aylesford MP Tracey Crouch has called for showdown talks about the results, and said questions had to be answered following publication of the results.

She said: "These are obviously disappointing figures. While there have been some improvements in challenging schools, the overall headline figure for Medway remains well below the national average."

However, Medway Council has defended its position stating that gradual progress was being made.

Director of children and adult services Barbara Peacock said: "Improving educational standards in Medway is of the utmost importance and we are working intensively with schools where improvements are needed to ensure that they progress as quickly as they can."

Underperforming schools face being taken over by an academy sponsor.

Seaside town named as one of the world's top must-see destinations

By Marijke Cox

marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

TO SOME, it's just a shabby seaside town, still trying to live off the fame of its 1960s heyday.

Others, however, see it as Kent's up and coming art capital, with the Turner Contemporary and the Old Town taking centre stage.

But whatever your view, put that aside, for travel experts from the well-respected Rough Guide have spoken – and it's good news for Margate, with the coastal town being ranked among the world's best in the Travel Hotlist 2013.

Sitting proudly alongside the likes of Stockholm, Puerto Rico, northeast Iceland and Valparaíso in Chile, Margate has been selected as a must-see destination.

Rough Guides' web editor, Tim Chester, heaps praise on the town, which is in the throws of a renaissance, with the opening of the Turner Contemporary last year and plans for the world's first heritage theme park at the Dreamland site.

Mr Chester says: "From the Turner Contemporary to the proliferation of other indie art spaces, vintage shops and cute cafés in the Old Town, Margate now offers much more than golden sands and dilapidated seaside charm."

The town has received harsh criticism in the past – even from its own residents – and in recent years has been labelled as one of the "ghost towns" of the UK due to its high proportion of boarded-up shops. But things are on the up for the former popular seaside hotspot.

Chief executive of Visit Kent, Sandra Matthews-Marsh, said Margate is getting noticed as a growing world-class destination.

"It offers so much to so many and is at the forefront of the revival of our traditional seaside resorts," she said. "The opening of the Turner Contemporary, the delightful independent shops and galleries opening up in the Old Town alongside the growing number of fine-dining opportunities, all supported by the fast trains to and from London, have brought in new visitors."

She stressed that Margate is the "perfect destination" for the increasing interest in UK domestic tourism and the staycation, "offering the delights of a vintage seaside holiday and, at the same time, a world-class arts and culture destination with a growing metropolitan-style café culture in a remarkable, romantic setting".

She added: "This accolade is a great vote of confidence in the future of Margate."

War and Peace moves

AFTER 30 years at Paddock Wood's Hop Farm, the annual War and Peace Show is shifting its home to Folkestone Racecourse.

Renamed War and Peace Revival, organisers say the move is designed to inject new life into the event after it became "a little staid". It takes place in July.

Shepway council said it was "delighted" by the festival's decision to relocate to the venue and hoped it would deliver a boost to the area.

Jury hears 'death' tape

A COURT this week heard harrowing phone calls recorded the day before a hairdresser was stabbed to death at her beauty salon in the middle of Ashford.

Ivan Esack, 38, stands accused of the murder of his estranged wife Natalie, 33, in April. He denies the claim on the grounds of diminished responsibility. On the phone call played at Maidstone Crown Court, he says her options are "death, death or death". The case continues.

Motorist crash charge

POLICE have charged a 23-year-old man from Teynham in connection with a car crash in Bapchild which saw 14-year-old Kyle Coen from Sittingbourne killed as he cycled along the A2 London Road in July.

Robert Lawrence, 23, of Barrow Green, Teynham, has been charged with failing to stop after an accident and perverting the course of justice. He appears in court next month.

Predictive policing set to stop crime before it even happens

HOLLYWOOD movie Minority Report saw Tom Cruise as part of a futuristic police force capable of arresting people for crimes they are yet to commit – now Kent is following suit.

The county's Police and Crime Commissioner, Ann Barnes, has endorsed a new radical approach to be rolled out in north Kent called 'predictive policing'.

It uses sophisticated data analysis, historical crime data and analysis of human behaviour to actually predict where and when crime is likely to occur.

Police chiefs can then ensure officers and other resources are in the right place at the right time to either deter

FUTURE: Based on the novel by Philip K Dick, Minority Report sees would-be criminals stopped the crime or tackle offenders.

The idea originated in the US and although several UK police forces have implemented the concept, it is believed the Kent version is more advanced.

Mrs Barnes, who was elected into the new role last month, explained: "It fits in with my vision of looking for new ideas and concepts that can help cut crime. It's a great mix of 'old fashioned policing' with 21st century technology.

"If the trial meets expectations, it will be rolled out in other areas across the county. As well as driving down crime, it helps increase police visibility, which I know is a top priority for Kent residents."

Chief Constable Ian Learmonth, who has led the implementation of the scheme, added: "Predictive policing helps address the root causes of crime and anti-social behaviour rather than looking solely at the symptoms and will be used as a tactical option as part of the force's current policing model."

CRIME

Horror as children 'trafficked to work in cannabis factories, for slavery or sex exploitation'

SPECIAL REPORT

by Marijke Cox

marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

THE sickening human trafficking trade has been thrown into the spotlight as new findings reveal youngsters in Kent continue to be sold into the sex industry by global crime rings.

Social care chiefs at County Hall are working to stop these unaccompanied asylum seekers – some aged just 10 – from ending up in the hands of unscrupulous gangs, but admit to difficulties due to the trade being shrouded in secrecy.

Even the children involved are too scared to speak, for fear of reprisals by the traffickers against their families.

A new report by social care chiefs at Kent County Council found that between April and October this year some 16 asylum seeker children went missing out of the 102 arrivals. While eight returned and one went to live with his mother, seven disappeared off the radar, amounting to one a month. In 2011, 21 children went missing.

Campaigners tackling the problem said, however, that the figure is likely to be considerably higher.

They also warned that the contentious issue of immigration has made the public "immune to the horrors" unlike if it was seven Kent-born children disappearing.

Chairman of the Human Trafficking Foundation, Anthony Steen, said: "Every child should have equal rights. Britain is a sanctuary for children.

"The total absence of reliable figures also means we don't have an accurate picture and the numbers are higher."

He added: "The public has become immune to these horrors."

Cabinet member for specialist children's services, Jenny Whittle, who works closely with Kent Police and the UK Border Agency, said it was difficult to get a clear picture even though every unaccompanied young asylum seeker is assessed when they enter the county.

"It's very hard to ascertain whether children come into the country with the understanding of being trafficked and a view to meeting up with the traffickers," she explained.

"Traffickers will put a bounty on the child's parents' heads if they don't do as they say.

"It's hard to get evidence from the frightened children."

Assessments are carried out and experts provide support to try and stop the children going missing, but Cllr Whittle admitted that unless the youngsters – typically aged 15 and 16 – are detained, there is nothing to stop them from disappearing.

She said: "The main thing we do is build up trust."

A specialist foster carer placement for trafficked children has also been established in Kent.

"We have just as much responsibility to these children as we would if a Kent child went missing," she added.

The county has the highest number of unaccompanied minors than anywhere else in the UK, due to being one of the main access points into Europe.

Cllr Whittle said some older asylum seekers who have been in Kent a while go missing due to the threat of deportation

TRAGEDY: Imagine if one of the victims was your child when they are 18. But others end up in the hands of traffickers, wanting to make money through exploitation.

"I don't want to pass the buck, but these international crime rings need to be taken down," she said.

Cllr Whittle admitted there was a lack of public awareness surrounding the problem and appealed to people in Kent to help protect these children.

"If you go into a nail bar, for example, and see a child working there who can't speak any English then report it to social services," she said.

"This problem gets lost as it is tied up with immigration as a whole, but people need to imagine if it was their child."

NEWS IN BRIEF

➔ Racecourse farewell

FOLKESTONE Racecourse closes its doors for what could be the last time this week.

The track at Westenhanger is closing, with no current plans to re-open, after its final meeting of the year on Tuesday. It follows a failed attempt to get the nod to redevelop some of the site and rising costs.

For full details of why the course is having to close and prospects of it returning, turn to our sports pages.

➔ Homeland star at zoo

STAR of hit TV show Homeland, Damian Lewis, made a special trip with his family to a local animal park during a break in filming.

The actor, who on Thursday was nominated for a Golden Globe, portrays Nicholas Brody in the hit Channel 4 show.

He stepped out of the limelight, however, to take his family to Port Lympne Wild Animal Park near Hythe. He said: "It was great getting so close to the animals."

➔ Cost of regeneration

TUNBRIDGE Wells council has confirmed it paid £250,000 to disband a regeneration joint partnership last month.

The Tunbridge Wells Regeneration Company was formed between the council and developer John Laing to examine potential options for the council's properties. It confirmed this week that over the past four years it had cost the council £663,700 but generated £2m.

CASE STUDY

IN October, people trafficker Osezua Osolase, of Beaumont Drive, Northfleet, was jailed for 20 years for using 'witchcraft' to force young girls into prostitution.

The 42-year-old was found guilty of human trafficking and rape offences. He promised the Nigerian girls modelling careers and a better life.

But the teenagers – some just 14 – were made to endure terrifying juju rituals to secure their silence and obedience before Osolase attempted to force them into a life of prostitution.

In one incident, a 16-year-old girl described the juju ceremony performed on her.

During the ritual, samples of her blood were taken, her head hair and pubic hair were also cut. She was then made to swear an oath of silence.

After this she was sent to the UK where she was held by Osolase.

Osolase was found guilty of one charge of rape, two charges of trafficking girls into the UK for sexual exploitation, and three similar charges of trafficking them out of the UK for the same reason. He was also found guilty of sexual activity with a child.

New business park on council's radar as part of major plans to secure airport's financial future

By Dean Kilpatrick

dean.kilpatrick@archant.co.uk

AMBITIOUS plans to transform Rochester Airport to create 1,000 skilled jobs and build a new business park, could be set to take off.

Medway Council has put forward a masterplan to turn the airfield into a profitable venture, combining both aviation and business.

Currently, the airport sees a small amount of aviation traffic including leisure tours, private planes and acts as a base for the National Police Air Service.

There are fears the site is falling behind the times and missing out on business opportunities, with some of the facilities reaching the end of their lifespan.

But proposals set out would see one of its grass runways shut, and 12 hectares made available for development. A new Tarmac runway would also be constructed.

Deputy leader of the council, Alan Jarrett, said: "I believe these proposals represent the best possible opportunity to protect Rochester Airport and secure a major private sector investment into this important asset in Medway.

"The proposed scheme will safeguard aviation for business, heritage and leisure use in this well-connected location, as well as releasing new land for jobs in Medway."

New operators would be offered a 25-year

FARMER'S FIELD SIMPLY TOOK OFF

A LITTLE over 80 years ago, Rochester Airport was nothing but fields belonging to a local farmer.

The land was purchased by Rochester City Council in order to create a municipal airport, which opened in 1933.

A little over a year later the Short brothers, who had been building airplanes on the Isle of Sheppey since 1909, took over the site and flights started coming in and out.

It suffered serious damage during the war, with German bombers devastating its runway and factory buildings.

After the war, the RAF 24 Elementary Flying School Training School was transferred to Rochester and renamed the Reserve Flying School, disbanding in 1953.

The council took over the lease again by 1979, with firms GEC and then BAe taking control.

Rochester Airport Ltd currently control the lease.

lease by the council to allow any future investor to create a long-term strategy for the site – and it is hoped the facility will attract business, history enthusiasts and tourists.

The council-owned airport, which was first established back in 1933, has been run by Rochester Airport Limited (RAL) on short-term leases for the past 12 years.

RAL chairman Dick Searle said: "Together with local residents, we have fought long and hard to retain the airport over the past 12 years.

"The combination of closing one runway and modernising the airport is a good one.

"With low-rise business employment buildings being considered, we can look forward to an exciting economic future for the area and a new landmark leisure facility."

The news has been welcomed by Rochester MP Mark Reckless, who said the proposals could prove to be a "real boost for the local economy".

The Tory MP said: "I am delighted that plans are now being put in place which should help secure Rochester Airport's future for many generations to come.

"Over many years, I have fought alongside local residents and councillors to retain this cherished asset.

"The proposed scheme will go a long way to safeguarding the airport's future as well as provide a real boost for the local economy through the job opportunities which it will provide."

The proposals will go before Medway Council's cabinet on Tuesday.

INDUSTRIAL ACTION

Strikes averted in binmen row

LAST-GASP talks to prevent piles of rubbish mounting up on the streets of Bromley at Christmas have proved successful.

In a long-running dispute over the dismissal of four members of staff, binmen in the town had vowed to stage three one-day walk outs.

But talks with reconciliation service ACAS this week have averted the crisis and the refuse workers will be at their posts on the proposed strike days of December 27 and 31. The first day of action would have been Friday.

The dispute centres around four staff who, it is claimed, accepted money to take excess rubbish from a resident. They were sacked, but after an investigation and appeal, it was proved they never received cash. But bosses at employers Veolia Environmental refused to take them back on. It sparked a furious response, with union Unite demanding action.

After negotiations failed, industrial action was agreed and the trio of walk out dates was organised by Britain's biggest union. But at the last minute, an agreement was reached – although details have yet to be confirmed.

With negotiations still at a delicate stage, Unite regional officer Onay Kasab said: "As is standard with ACAS agreements, Unite will not be issuing its own statement at this time."

The union had previously said the men are not guilty of the claims and deserve to be back working. They say the dismissals were "unjust".

The strike action would have involved 80 per cent of refuse workers at the Churchfields refuse and recycling centre.

Veolia said: "Following successful talks between Veolia and Unite led by ACAS, the industrial action planned in Bromley has been suspended. ACAS will be conducting further talks to resolve outstanding issues."

An ACAS statement said both sides are "committed" to resolving the dispute.

The reconciliation service said Veolia is asking Unite to never call another strike if other binmen are disciplined for taking unauthorised waste. And both sides have given "confidence" to Bromley Council that the disposal of unauthorised waste will be "eradicated".

They are working to re-employ the four men and the withdrawal of industrial action for two months to see how negotiations progress.

Widow 'calm and collected' as rare coin sells for double predicted price

By Chrissie Daniels

chrissie.daniels@archant.co.uk

A COIN found by a widow clearing out her late husband's chest of drawers has fetched nearly £300,000 at auction – double its estimate.

Astonishing scenes took place in a Lewes auction room last week as buyers from across the world frantically tried to get their hands on a piece of history.

But despite the huge sale price and volume of cash heading her way, the Tunbridge Wells woman, who wishes to remain anonymous, has managed to stay "calm and collected".

Collectors were shocked when, a

THE QUEEN ANNE VIGO FIVE GUINEAS

The coin dates back to 1703 – when Queen Anne began her reign – and was made with gold captured from Spanish galleons at the Battle of Vigo Bay.

It is believed that less than 20 such coins are around today, with 15 of them in private ownership. Only six have been offered for sale in the UK in the past 50 years.

few weeks ago, the rare Queen Anne Vigo five guineas was unearthed.

Upon making the discovery, the woman took the coin to auctioneers Gorrings in Tunbridge Wells.

It was valued at £120,000 and last Thursday collectors descended on the auctioneers' Lewes office in the hope of taking home the coin.

A bidding war ensued and soon the coin surpassed its £120,000 estimation and was eventually sold for £240,000 – £296,000 with the auction house commission added.

Leslie Gillham, who works in the Tunbridge Wells office, said the end result was "amazing".

He said: "I was shocked. Until then, as far as we know, the world record was £150,000 for the same coin and it was in better condition than this was."

"It was an extraordinary price. In the end, there were people there who wanted it enough."

He said the price shows the collectors market for rare coins is in rude good health.

Mr Gillham said, unusually, although there were several interested parties, including bidders online and on the phone, it came down to a bidding war between two people in the auction room.

He said: "The lady who had found the coin was surprised at the price. She is a very calm and collected person. It was beyond her wildest dreams."

"I am delighted. It is a once in a lifetime thing for such a rare coin to come in to the office without any fanfare. It's just an extraordinary thing to happen."

Fresh evidence from detective's home is the

By Marijke Cox

marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

FRESH evidence regarding the notorious Lord Lucan murder case has raised new questions over the mystery which has gripped the nation for decades.

In what is the latest twist in the gruesome tale, old notebooks, diaries, tapes and address books belonging to the late Kent detective DCI David "Buster" Gerring – who was in charge of the hunt for the infamous peer – have been uncovered by the BBC's Inside Out team.

DCI Gerring had stockpiled many personal notes and papers in boxes at his home in Tunbridge Wells – evidence which could help piece together the missing links in the case of the disappearing peer, who disappeared after the murder of his children's nanny Sandra Rivett at the family home in Belgravia in November 1974.

Lucan was found guilty of her murder in his absence. It is believed he told friends he discovered a man at his wife's house and intervened, but feared his estranged wife would implicate him, so fled.

His car was later found abandoned

THEORIES BEHIND THE LEGEND

■ After fleeing London, he took refuge with friend and wildlife park owner John Aspinall at Port Lympne. He stayed there until his death, at which point his body was fed to the lions.

■ He remained in the UK for two days following the murder while his friends – including Mr Aspinall and James Goldsmith – arranged to have him flown out of the country via Headcorn. He was flown to the south of France and then on to Africa. He returned for a secret visit to the UK in 1985.

■ Detectives are understood to have received reports Lord Lucan was still alive in 2002 and living a secret life in Mozambique, using the name John Crawford.

INFAMOUS: Lord Lucan, aka Lucky in Newhaven and it was thought the peer had died after throwing himself off a ship in the English Channel.

But this year, a woman named Shirley Robey, who worked for Lucan's friend, Kent wildlife park owner John Aspinall, claimed she was instructed by her boss to organise two trips for the peer's children to be flown to Africa in the 1980s for Lucan to see them from afar, suggesting he had fled abroad and not died.

Speaking to this newspaper in August, she admitted she was stunned when both Lucan's wife and son, George Bingham, strenuously denied the claims of the visit to the Gabon – where Mr Aspinall started a gorilla rescue and rehabilitation centre – when George was 13.

"His apparent response in denying that he went to Africa at that time took me by complete surprise," she said.

"I cannot speculate why, but assume he must have his own reasons for responding thus.

"I know arrangements were made and am as sure as I could possibly be that he and his sister went and that Lord Lucan observed them from a distance."

This week's BBC report has strengthened this claim due to the discovery of a copy of a confidential Met Police report from 2002, which gives the suspected pseudonym that Lucan may have been living under during the 1980s and 90s in Africa.

The new evidence also reveals a police statement in which Lord Lucan's young daughter Camilla Bingham, aged four at the time, was recorded as having claimed there was a mystery man living in the Belgravia home where the nanny was murdered.

In the statement, made by the girl's aunt Lady Sarah Gibbs, she said:

"Sometimes he sleeps in Nanny's room, and Nanny sleeps with us, and sometimes he sleeps in Mummy's, she's got a gigantic bed."

Lady Gibbs said she thought he was the nanny's boyfriend because of the way the elder sister, Frances, referred to him, although the BBC said they had so far been unable to get a response to this evidence.

The documentary also included an interview with Lucan's brother Hugh Bingham, who said he did not believe the peer killed himself. It was the first television interview he has ever given on the mystery.

"Let us hope that now, with the way in which the evidence seems to be gathering, there is a chance that maybe the inquest result could be set aside," he said.

"If that happened then the warrant of arrest would fall away and my brother's situation would be restored to the normal situation of a man innocent until proven guilty." Also interviewed was Neil Berriman, the son of Sandra Rivett.

He said: "As far as I'm concerned, he murdered my mother, and if he never murdered my mother and if there is another murderer, I need to get to the bottom of it."

latest twist in the Lucan mystery

"I want to know the truth."

Speaking to KoS earlier this year, Ms Robey said there was a big question mark over Lucan's guilt and she was not wholly convinced he was responsible for the nanny's murder.

The 56-year-old, now living in France, worked as a secretary at a casino run by Mr Aspinall and Sir James Goldsmith during the early 1980s.

The men were close pals of Lucan, who was nicknamed Lucky for his devotion to gambling.

She spoke to Mr Aspinall in 1991, when he insisted Lucan was innocent.

Publicly, the casino owner said he believed his friend was guilty and had killed himself.

Ms Robey said: "Mr Aspinall said if he continued to say publicly Lord Lucan was guilty and died on a ship then it meant Lord Lucan was still alive. It meant everyone who had been involved knew."

"Just before he died in 2000, Mr Aspinall did a newspaper interview and said he believed Lord Lucan was a murderer and had killed himself. I was told as long as he was saying this it meant Lord Lucan was alive."

"So, as far as I know, Lord Lucan was still alive then."

EXHIBITION

From Dickens and Austen, to piracy and revolt, centre reveals our past

By Nick Ames

nick.ames@archant.co.uk

THE county's turbulent past – including revolt, wars, imprisonment and piracy – is available for viewing at the newly opened Kent Historical and Library Centre in Maidstone.

Items from museum collections and The National Archives are all on display for the next three months, after a formal opening by the Duke of Kent on Tuesday.

As well as writings from Charles Dickens and Jane Austen they include some other, lesser known, relics.

"Kent has a reputation as the county of rebellion, so it is only fitting that we have a document detailing the witness statements by those who saw, at first hand, the Peasants' Revolt," said Kent County Council historian Stuart Bligh.

"Then we have a document dating from 699AD which is in Latin. It has the word Cantie included – the first reference to the name Kent to be found anywhere."

Accompanied by an ornate period pistol is an account from 1572 of the seizure of a pirate vessel, The Lucy, in the Swale, off Faversham.

Three men on board were arrested by Captain Gylberte Horsley who made an examination of the ship's cargo. His report is on show and details a "sworde and dagger" and an "emptye cheste".

Mr Bligh said: "It seems they weren't very good pirates – their treasure chest was empty."

Another unusual item is a series of accounts kept by Henry IV's consort, Queen Joan of Navarre. After the monarch's death she fell into disfavour as his son, Henry V, accused her of witchcraft and attempting to poison him.

Firstly she was held captive in Pevensey Castle, Sussex, before Leeds Castle was her prison for 103 days prior to her release in 1422.

The accounts tell of her visitors and her financial dealing – as well as hint at a romantic relationship with her minstrel, named as Nicholas, and a frequent visitor.

Mr Bligh said: "She was nominally a prisoner but seemed to be constantly holding feasts and entertaining. Sums of £30 are detailed – a vast amount for the time."

The display contains the only known example of the signature of playwright Philip Marlowe, as well as letters from Dickens and Austen, along with a copy of the Magna Carta, made about 85 years after the original, and a charter from Thomas Becket, as well as detailed maps.

CHRISTMAS

Leysdown ready for switch on

A LANTERN procession will take place through the streets of Leysdown on Wednesday, followed by a community carol service and the turning on of the town's Christmas illuminations.

Artist Rob Olins has installed a new lighting scene for the seafront as part of RoseTinted, a scheme designed to use art as a key part of urban renewal, with the switch being flicked at 7pm.

Swale Borough Council's cabinet member for regeneration, John Wright, said: "Leysdown RoseTinted has worked hard to secure additional funding to making the Illuminations project a success. The community has pulled together to light up the village, creating another attraction for visitors to the area."

OLYMPICS

The race is on to ensure legacy of the Games is kept on track

SPECIAL REPORT

By Marijke Cox and Greg Miles

greg.miles@archant.co.uk

IT CAPTURED the hearts and minds of the nation – but how exactly do we continue to harness the power of the Olympics and Paralympics for current and future generations?

Even before the incredible summer of sport had begun, the word legacy had almost been worn out. Now, in the dying embers of 2012, there is an expectation on the promise of hosting the Games to be delivered.

Kent County Council will unveil what it has dubbed its Olympic Legacy Plan for the county in the spring.

Early discussions have pinpointed a number of areas where the county can make a change, and build on existing successful schemes.

This includes supporting and promoting volunteering, which worked to great effect at the Games where 4,000 Kent residents worked as Games Makers; working with a new sport and physical activity framework in the county to enthuse youngsters to keep fit; create an education legacy to pass on the values of the Paralympics and Olympics to youngsters; and creating a culture network to bring together the arts communities from around the county. It will dovetail

FLAME IS STILL ALIVE

One of the key legacy ambitions from London 2012 was to get more people playing sport – something no other host city has managed to do.

That is why I'm so pleased the latest data from Sport England's Active People survey shows an increase on last year of 750,000 adults playing sport every week and an increase of almost 1.6 million people since we won the right to host the Games. This is good progress.

The figures have been the combination of strong partnerships, structured programmes and targeted investment.

Sport England has launched a £1 billion Youth and Community Sports Strategy at the start of the year, upgraded hundreds of local sports clubs through the Places People Play programme, recruited new coaches and sports leaders, and UK Sport has mounted successful bids for major sporting events – all of this to ensure the legacy of the Games will be long lasting and effective.

However, the sports that show the greatest increases in participation are those that have understood that the way people choose to play sport has changed.

Innovative connected partnerships, targeted programmes, small sided versions of the games and a more consumer focused approach are all key ingredients for successful sport.

We will always look back with pride at the London Olympic and Paralympic Games and remember a summer defined by remarkable sport. But we have always wanted London 2012 to be more than just a summer of sport and create the first Legacy Games and we remain committed to delivering on our pledge to inspire a generation of young people to choose sport.

HUGH ROBERTSON, SPORTS MINISTER AND FAVERSHAM AND MID KENT MP

with a Government promise to spend £1bn in the next five years on a youth sports strategy, as well as change the school curriculum to have more emphasis on competitive sports.

Critics have not been slow in questioning the Government's commitment given its programme of selling playing fields.

But the latest plans to put the focus on compe-

PAST AND FUTURE: Above, the Olympic Torch Relay captured the hearts and minds of communities across the county earlier this year. Below, it's vital we continue the sporting legacy with our young tion have reignited the debate as to whether the approach alienates or encourages children to take part in sport. This formed a key part of the debate on the Olympic legacy at a discussion held by BBC Radio Kent at Tonbridge School recently.

Triple Olympic medallist Steve Backley, from Sidcup, feels competitive sport is the way forward. He said: "It's not about money, it's about the passion, belief and commitment. It's about engaging, it's about the parents getting involved. Get the competition back, and encourage participation."

Dartford's Paralympic judo bronze medallist Ben Quilter agreed, but felt there was also a need to cater for non-competitive physical activity.

"Physical activity doesn't have to be competitive, but you can balance that out," he said. "I would disagree with having non-competitive sports days where you don't have winners or losers, because ultimately you do."

Statistics show that school sport is still alienating girls, with four out of five not doing enough exercise, and 23 per cent of women admitting PE at school put them off sport, in recent surveys.

Chatham and Aylesford MP Tracey Crouch, who is on the Culture, Media and Sport Select Committee, cited an example from Australia as to how the media can play its part in changing those figures.

"On the whole the media is not very interested in women's sports, there are few role models in sport, which is itself not encouraging women into sports," she said.

"We've got a fantastic example in Australia where they had a big ding dong with one of the male dominated sports around its broadcasting coverage," she said. "They decided in the end not to go ahead with the male sport and instead to cover netball every Sunday morning, and participation in netball has absolutely rocketed as a result."

"I do think there has to be some emphasis on women's sports to get participation up."

Meanwhile, disabled people in the county are to get more opportunities to take part in sport after a charity-run training scheme was given a £850,000 boost as part of the Paralympic legacy.

InstructAbility, run by charities Aspire and YMCAfit, aims to give unemployed, disabled people in the county the chance to train as fitness instructors.

The scheme also looks to encourage more disabled people to take part in sport and fitness through a series of outreach activities.

THE LASTING EFFECT ON OUR FINANCES

THE Olympic and Paralympic Games have not only led to more people getting involved in sport, but are set to leave a lasting legacy on the county's bank balance.

According to County Hall chiefs, the Games' legacy figure could reach as much as £324 million over the next four years.

And part of this is down to you, giving visitors a warm welcome and in doing so, making sure they return.

A survey, conducted by Qa Research on behalf of tourism body Visit Kent, revealed the average Games visitor spent £70 per day during their trip, compared to non-Games visitors' £60.

Sandra Matthews-Marsh, chief executive at Visit Kent, said 2012 had been a golden opportunity to showcase the county, adding: "We are now looking forward to 2013 and beyond when we will welcome back our traditional visitors alongside new ones – those inspired by our campaigns and this year's Games returning with their friends and relatives keen to spend more time exploring."

Witness appeal after ear slashed

AN INVESTIGATION has been launched after a 34-year-old had his ear slashed after challenging a group of youngsters he had spotted causing damage to property.

The incident took place in Lords Wood Lane, Chatham just after midnight last Sunday.

The victim had spotted a group of four young men, believed to be between 17 and 18, running towards Prince's Avenue after causing damage to property nearby.

A police spokesman explained: "He chased the group down the road and asked what they were doing. He then felt pressure on his right ear and the group then ran off. He noticed drips of blood on his clothes and that his earlobe had been sliced with what has been described as a sharp object."

One of the group is described as of large build and about 6ft tall. The other three were described as being about 5ft 11ins and of slim build. Anyone with information is asked to contact DC Mark Silk on 101.

Hope Bilbo's film debut sends young on quest to read Tolkien classic

By Chrissie Daniels

chrissie.daniels@archant.co.uk

A SCHOLAR is hoping the expected blockbuster success of The Hobbit will inspire a new generation to pick up the books of JRR Tolkien.

The first in a trilogy of movies based on the author's literary classic hits the big screens this weekend, and is widely tipped to be the festive season's highest grossing film.

The Hobbit: An Unexpected Journey, is directed by Peter Jackson who was behind the hugely successful Lord of the Rings movies, which went on to become three of the biggest films of all time.

Now Janet Montefiore, a professor of 20th century literature at the University of Kent, is hoping youngsters will see the film and then head to the bookstore.

She said: "If people see the film they will go and read the book. I am sure Tolkien's books will stay alive, there will always be people who want to read them. I don't think there is any question of The Hobbit being forgotten.

"The film will bring the book to all those who have not seen it and makes it more accessible to a mass audience.

"It's a classic – a lot of people still buy The Secret Garden. The film can fade, but the book goes on."

Ms Montefiore, who has written essays on the author, said she is looking forward to seeing how the 1937 book has translated onto the big screen.

She said: "I will be interested to know how much of the original dialogue they have used.

"The really best parts of The Hobbit are in the second half of the book, so I will certainly be interested to see what they do with that.

ACTING UP: Martin Freeman plays Bilbo Baggins

"The second half is, in a sense, more grown up. A number of the characters that we have gone on a long journey with get killed in battle.

"It shows what it costs to receive a treasure."

Sir Ian McKellen reprises his role as Gandalf, while Andy Serkis (Gollum) and Elijah Wood (Frodo) also return.

British actor and former star of BBC's The Office, Martin Freeman, plays Bilbo Baggins.

Orlando Bloom, who grew up in Canterbury, will appear as Legolas in the second and third installment of the Hobbit movies.

TRANSPORT

Protest over season ticket price hikes

SOUTHEASTERN has hit back over figures recently published by independent rail user watchdog Passenger Focus, saying they were not accurate – and said some season ticket price hikes will not be as great as recently feared.

It said some figures used by the group were up to one per cent out. Across the network, however, the average rise will be 4.2 per cent.

Commuters made a protest at the price rises outside a number of Kent stations this week, including Canterbury East. Organised by trade union the TUC, it saw Christmas cards handed out to travellers to highlight the rises.

KCC take steps over care cash 'time bomb'

KENT County Council says it is acting now to tackle soaring adult social care costs which experts warn could overwhelm local authorities by 2020.

The Local Government Association has warned that councils are facing a funding time bomb as the huge cost of supporting the elderly and those with learning and physical disabilities would leave little money left in the coffers to pay for other services.

Now KCC says it is to examine its services with a view to keeping people in their homes for longer.

Heating is a major purchase in our life. Not just the cost of buying a system but the cost of the energy to run it and, just as importantly, the costs to maintain it.

Maintenance Get rid of the maintenance costs altogether with a Sunflow 12 year guarantee. Nobody inspecting every year and heating that has a life expectancy of 40 to 50 years! A Sunflow heater is well made and hand finished in Germany. So if you add maintenance and depreciation prevalent in other systems this could easily be a 30% reduction in costs in the first 12 years. That's just the start!

Energy Management Often called modular heating, Sunflow German built electric heaters allow total control of heating costs. Every room can be time and temperature controlled, far more accurately than any form of wet system.

We have a range of controls from simple manual thermostats and timers, to room by room remote control. Ask for advice. Whatever controls you choose you will be able to decide where and when to use energy.

CENSUS

Is there a Jedi Knight living on your street?

By Marijke Cox

marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

MORE than a year-and-a-half after the census hit our doormats and the results are in – and it makes for an interesting read.

Not only do we have a small group of people practising witchcraft, but Kent and Medway boasts more than 6,700 Jedi Knights.

And while many choose to believe in a god, others prefer to put their faith in music, with more than 130 of the county's residents putting their religion as 'heavy metal'.

Giving a glimpse into the characteristics of Kent's population, the census – carried out every 10 years – has painted a picture of society in a way no other survey can.

On March 27, 2011, households across the country were asked to fill in the census to allow the Office of National Statistics (ONS) to look at the changing population, from religion and ethnicity to health and accommodation. It even went into the finer details of which households had access to a car.

The results revealed interesting statistics, from Canterbury having the highest number of part-time workers – probably on account of being a uni-

The Jedi are at the heart of the fictional universe created in the popular Star Wars films.

They believe in The Force, a power which binds all living things and which can be harnessed for the power of good. Those who are trained in the way of The Force become a Jedi and through training a Jedi Knight.

Key characters such as Luke Skywalker, Yoda and Obi Wan Kenobi were among their number. They look to protect the universe from those who exploit the Dark Side and use The Force for aggression and domination, as portrayed by characters such as Darth Vader and The Emperor.

NEVER WATCHED STAR WARS?

JEDI KNIGHT: Mark Hamill played the role of Luke Skywalker in the first three films versity town – and Thanet ranked as third in the list of places with the most people practicing witchcraft.

Kent and Medway also boasts 463 Wiccans, who practice Pagan witchcraft traditions.

Most surprisingly, however, is the large number – 6,738 – of Jedi Knights.

This loyal following, named after the fictional Star Wars creed, is the most popular alternative faith in the county.

Looking at migration statistics, Maidstone, Swale and Ashford are in the highest 10 local authorities in England and Wales for people declared as white gypsy or Irish travellers, although numbers are relatively small.

With ethnicity overall, Kent continues to have a noticeably small black and Asian population, despite the fact parts of the county are on the doorstep of ethnically diverse London, where fewer than half the people living there are white British.

In Kent, just two per cent of the population is black or mixed race and in Medway, just a slightly higher three per cent.

The Asian population is also small in the county, with just three per cent in Kent, and Medway at six per cent. Gravesham is the only area with a noticeably higher population of Asian people, due to the influx of economic migrants in the 1950s and 1960s.

Experts suggest the low number of black and Asian people is due to lack of job opportunities in Kent for migrants moving to the UK to work, making them more likely to move to London.

The census shows our county's ageing population is doing well, with a healthy 13,158 aged 90 and over, and more than 23,500 aged 85-89.

The average age of the population is 41 and in Medway 37.

Guy Goodwin, ONS director of census, said the local level information would help plan for the future.

"This is just the tip of the iceberg of census statistics," he said.

"Further rich layers of vital information will be revealed as we publish more detailed data for very local levels over the coming months."

ASTRONOMY

A legend is remembered as The Sky at Night says goodbye to its brightest star

By Chris Murphy

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

HE INSPIRED a generation to look to the skies and this week, those for whom the heavens became a fascinating classroom, paid tribute to the ultimate teacher – Sir Patrick Moore.

The presenter of the BBC's The Sky at Night passed away last weekend at his home in West Sussex. He was 89.

Dr Becky Parker is director of the Langton Star Centre, at Simon Langton Grammar School for Boys in Canterbury and a respected figure in enhancing the knowledge of the universe. She met him earlier this year.

She explained: "He was an inspiration to millions. His passion and delight in bringing the universe to so many people was truly remarkable.

"I was honoured to speak to him when I received the Royal Astronomical Society's Patrick Moore Medal."

The school will host the local leg of the BBC's Stargazing Live event next month. Dr Parker said Sir Patrick's memory would be "honoured and celebrated" as part of the night.

Paul Andrew is the president of the South East Kent Astronomical Society, from his Dover home, he said: "He inspired me when I was 11 and I read one of his books. Later, I helped him write one on building amateur observatories. I build them, and was delighted to help. He always called himself an amateur, yet he helped NASA with the Moon landings."

Picture: ROBIN HAMMOND

Picture: BILL GALLOWAY

SAD LOSS: Sir Patrick Moore was a true legend, above is the telescope he used to map the moon in the 1960s

Noel Clark of the Mid-Kent Astronomical Society said: "Sir Patrick supported our fledgling society by becoming its honorary president and spoke on at least one occasion. We found an appointment postcard he sent us in the early days, written on his Remington manual typewriter and signed.

"Several of our members went to his house in Selsey in 2010 to visit him and look at his telescopes; a pilgrimage to the shrine of amateur astronomy."

"Sir Patrick was as affable and hospitable as ever.

"His presence will be greatly missed, and his passing is a tremendous sadness to astronomers worldwide. His legacy will live on in astronomy societies up and down the country."

PROFILE

The first edition of the BBC's The Sky at Night broadcast on April 24, 1957. It became a national institution; buoyed by the space race of the 1960s and subsequent exploration into deep space.

Sir Patrick Moore would create a piece of history by becoming the longest running presenter of a TV show. His last appearance was just a week before his death.

From 2004 he appeared from the front room of his house, after arthritis prevented him from reaching the BBC studios.

He never married after fiancé Lorna was killed by a bomb during World War Two.

He was made a knight in 2001; won a Bafta for services to television and was an honorary fellow of the Royal Society.

Politically, he supported the UK Independence Party.

His death was announced in a statement issued by friends:

"After a short spell in hospital, it was determined that no further treatment would benefit him, and it was his wish to spend his last days in his own home, Farthings, where he passed on, in the company of close friends and carers and his cat Ptolemy."

His funeral will be private, but in March, his 90th birthday will be marked with a farewell event.

RACK AND RUIN: As these pictures show, the interior of Lillesden School for Girls, which closed down 25 years ago, is in urgent need of repair. Elsewhere, blackboards and even name tags still remain in place

Photographs reflect just how far derelict 'school of mirrors' has fallen – but help may be at hand

By Chrissie Daniels

chrissie.daniels@archant.co.uk

THESE eerie photos reveal how a once prestigious girl's school in Hawkhurst has been left to rot for decades.

Lillesden School for Girls – or as it would later be known, Bedgebury Girls' public school – is steeped in history having once been known as the Lillesden estate mansion.

But after closing nearly 25 years ago, it has stood empty, attracting only the occasional vandal or thief.

Attempts to revive its fortunes and bring it back to its former glory continue, but hopes its future would be secured earlier this year when it went up for auction, with a guide price of up to £2 million, were dashed when it was withdrawn from sale.

It is owned by Tony Wright who is in discussions to secure the future of the building and hopes things will move quickly in the new year.

Crooks have stripped the lead roof, causing water damage, and much of the interior is now in a state of disarray.

Many of the more valuable items inside – which included silver trophies and an oil canvas – have since been sold at a local fine art auctioneers. Still hanging on some of its walls are huge, ornate mirrors.

These photos, posted on website 28dayslater recently, give a glimpse into the grand building, nicknamed 'the school of mirrors'.

Yet its future remains far from certain. It has planning permission to be developed into 14 apartments, but the collapse in the economy appears to have put plans on ice.

Sandhurst couple Peter and Marie Jackson are campaigning to try and save the building and want to use its grounds to create a Japanese garden, which they want to call the Stroll Garden of Hope.

For the past two years they have been attempting to raise funds to allow them to make their dreams a reality.

Mrs Jackson said: "I still believe we'll save Lillesden. We have a business plan and strategy that would include heritage rooms for both Lillesden history and school, and Hawkhurst heritage.

"We would use the building for mini conferences, community use, Lillesden School reunions, and educational purposes.

"A tea room, shop and garden nursery are also plans that we would want to achieve."

Anyone who wishes to help with the project can email marie@thestrollgardenofhope.org.uk.

BANKER THAT INVESTED IN ESTATE

THE Lillesden estate was built in 1855, by banker Edward Loyd who moved there after marrying.

Mr Loyd was co-founder of the Loyd Entwistle and Co bank, established in Manchester and which would eventually become part of the NatWest empire.

It is thought his family kept the estate until after World War One when it was sold.

The Grade II-listed building became a plush private school and pupils would pay thousands of pounds to be educated there.

But it is thought falling pupil numbers and lack of demand led to its closure in 1988.

TIME TRAVELLER'S SCHOOL TRIP

FANS of TV sci-fi hit Doctor Who may recognise the building after it appeared in an episode filmed in 1989.

The Curse of Fenric was shot in a variety of locations in and around Hawkhurst, including the old school building itself.

The Doctor at the time of the filming was Sylvester McCoy (pictured right), who was the seventh incarnation of the famous time traveller.

He was the last actor to portray the Doctor before the series was reinvigorated with the arrival of a new series in 2005 in the form of Christopher Eccleston.

Loophole on diesel use clears the road ahead for farmers to play key role when snow falls

By Chris Murphy

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

A RELAXATION in the rules over the use of red diesel on public road means Kent's army of farmers will be called up to use their agricultural vehicles to help the rest of us when the snows come.

Red diesel – which is regular diesel injected with an instantly recognisable dye to allow authorities to spot misuse – is only permitted for use in certain off-road commercial vehicles such as tractors and cranes.

Different tax rules are applied which makes it considerably cheaper, and it is designed to allow industry, such as farming, to turn a profit while keeping food prices down.

But due to its cheaper price, it is strictly forbidden for such a fuel to be used in vehicles which use public roads.

The bizarre legal tangle has previously meant farmers were unable to help anyone trapped in snow, despite having plenty of vehicles perfectly capable of the job.

This year, however, HM Revenue &

PLOUGHING AHEAD WITH THE RESCUE EFFORT EACH WINTER

ANDREW Brealy is one of the farmers who regularly patrols local roads when the snow falls to help stranded motorists.

He runs two farms covering 1,200 acres in the Herne Bay area. He has one snow plough at each farm which he's used for more than 40 years. He said they try to cover as many miles as possible, but with so many abandoned cars and rescues needed, they can't always do as much as they'd like.

Mr Brealy explained:

"We have an advantage doing it at night as there is less traffic on the road. People today don't have snow tyres and we find plenty of people at the side of the road in distress. We need to pull cars out and move stranded vehicles out of the way."

"We don't think in terms of miles that we clear because there are so many variables. We just do as much as we can. People expect the roads to be cleared instantly, but it can't be done."

promised to mobilise its force of farmers should the weather turn nasty in the next few months.

Winter service crews from KCC have already been out in force in rural communities, delivering more than 200 one-tonne bags of salt-sand mix. This is on top of more than 2,000 salt bins being filled.

David Brazier, Kent County Council deputy cabinet member for environment, highways and waste, said: "In addition to expanding the number of salt bins in Kent, we have again encouraged parishes to take up our offer to have one tonne salt bags."

"We are prepared for wintery weather – and this allows parishes to co-ordinate where and who will treat their patch, so people can work together to improve conditions in their area."

"In the event of significant snowfall, rural communities will also be served by our army of farmers who go out in any weather when they get the call, clearing stretches of important routes to help communities. They play an important role and the work they do is widely recognised."

Customs has created a legal loophole so if there is sufficient snow, red diesel vehicles can be used on the road for certain critical duties.

Previously, red diesel could be used by some vehicles during snowy weather – but only those designed for purpose, such as gritting lorries.

Now more than 150 of the county's farmers have signed up to assist and have been armed with various snow-ploughs which bolt to their tractors.

They have been assigned with the task of clearing rural areas close to their farms in a bid to prevent the county's transport from network grinding to a halt.

KCC welcomed the decision and

Going against the stereotype

Mike Barrett, chief executive of homelessness charity Porchlight, tells us to think before jumping to conclusions over society's less fortunate

POVERTY exists for those both in and out of work.

When we as a society discuss poverty there's a tendency to think of destitution, hunger and homelessness. Poverty does regularly lead to homelessness, but it also hides a myriad of other social evils.

Poor educational attainment, poor physical and mental health can lead those affected into destructive lifestyles that mean they are further distanced from mainstream society.

Research released this year by the Joseph Rowntree Foundation found that some 60 per cent of people claiming means-tested benefits are in work and struggling to keep their families afloat.

This situation is worsening as employment opportunities reduce and the Government's welfare reforms take hold.

In fact, there are 1.4 million part-time workers in the UK wanting full-time work – the highest figure in 20 years.

The number of people living in low income, working households, in 2009/10 grew to four million adults and 2.1 million children. This figure keeps rising, so reducing benefits to those most in need will only escalate this rate of increase.

The research goes on to say: "The risk of poverty for a working-age adult reliant on means-tested benefit is far higher than for a pensioner similarly reliant on state pension and means-tested pension credit."

I am in no way suggesting pensioners are better off. Far from it. I'm of the view we treat our elders with as much contempt as we do the poor and destitute in our celebrity and greed-driven society.

It should be noted, however, that as the state retirement age rises so does the chances of poverty to older people dependent on state pension.

Of course, arguing that injustice leads to poverty is not a fashionable viewpoint to hold.

This year's British Social Attitudes Survey revealed almost two thirds of people now believe benefits are so generous they discourage job seeking.

Three times the rate of those thinking they cause hardship.

The majority of people hold the belief that citizens in need are in this position due to unreliability, laziness, self-induced addiction and stupidity.

This is about as far from the truth as you can get.

Of course there are minorities of people who, for various reasons, will never be able to integrate and play a full part in society, but for the great majority of the poor, aspiration and dignity are what keeps them from crumbling under the incessant pressure of fiscal hardship and constant abuse from some politicians and sections of the media.

What we need is a revival of

Truth is people who claim benefits would rather earn a living wage compassion, tolerance and understanding for those less fortunate, especially at this time of year when the choices that divide us are stark.

For some, the big decision is what to buy our loved ones for Christmas. For others, it's a choice between a present for a child, food on the table or turning the heating on.

Perhaps we can find a truer meaning to Christmas and find it in our hearts to help, not just when the news reinforces stereotypes by exposing a benefit cheat. The truth is people who claim benefits would much rather earn a living wage to provide for themselves and their families, fulfil their aspirations and not be embarrassed simply to exist.

KOS COMMENT

Don't ignore the trauma of these young victims

SEVEN children going missing from Kent in just six months is a shocking statistic.

It shouldn't matter whether they are white, black, Asian, Vietnamese or Afghan. They have gone missing from our streets, sold into the sex trade or domestic slavery with nothing but a life of misery ahead of them. Let's hope authorities can find a way of helping.

With the contentious issue of immigration frequently debated, society has become somewhat hardened to the topic and, sadly, the tragedies and victims that come with it.

If seven Kent children went missing, it would be hitting national headlines.

All children matter; imagine if it was your own.

Margate the place to be

WHILE we all appreciate the hard work going into rejuvenating Margate, most will agree it's hardly one of the top 10 destinations in the world.

But if a travel expert wants to call it that, then so be it; we can sit back and reap the rewards from the disgruntled tourists.

Jobs boost a flying fancy

WHAT nonsense from Mark Bradbury (Letters, December 2).

Building an estuary airport would not solve the region's unemployment by miraculously relocating thousands of jobs from the City and Canary Wharf to north Kent, nor would it attract workers in this direction using cheaper, less congested transport.

As for 'some new housing' being needed, in reality this is just a euphemism for having to build a couple of new towns.

I think this corner of the country is overcrowded enough already, and is covered in more than its fair share of concrete.

Either expanding London's airports which would only necessitate upgrading existing infrastructure, or building a new one more conveniently located for the majority of the population west or north of Heathrow is surely the way forward.

Bill Stevens, Faversham

If only it was just that easy

THERE is far more to consider than the taste when game birds are on the menu (KoS, story December 9).

Your reporter's encouragement to 'get involved' omits to mention that, as there is no mandatory training required for using firearms in the UK, licences are often granted to inexperienced and young people, meaning birds are often not killed outright, but instead are wounded by novice shooters.

In addition, far from ending up on the dinner table, vast numbers of dead birds are dumped as waste product, often buried in mass graves.

It is estimated more than 20 million birds released each year do not even reach the sight of the gun, but instead die from exposure, cannibalism, predation, traffic collision or starvation.

Gamekeepers snare, trap, poison and bludgeon tens of thousands of animals each week, including domestic pets, in an effort to protect game birds from natural predators.

Animal welfare is also a major issue. Hens on many farms are kept in the same type of small battery cage that has been made illegal for farmed chickens.

Chicks are often kept in sheds, packed in their thousands, where the stress caused means that to stop behaviours such as feather pecking and cannibalism, they are fitted with masks or bits – devices which mutilate them and prevent their beaks from closing properly.

I was also sorry to see a dead woodcock in your photo; these largely nocturnal birds are suffering a worrying drop in numbers. Concern is so great the Game and Wildlife Conservation Trust are carrying out a 'woodcock watch'.

Wild, natural and free-range meat surely is a menu treat, but game birds are shot for sport as part of a £1 billion industry, not for food.

Janet Bott, Lynsted.

This is not fair game at all

IF ONE eats pheasant, one is most unlikely to be eating meat from wild, natural and free-range birds.

The birds are mass produced like commercial poultry so they can be shot.

Animal Aid filmed undercover and found the caged birds suffer a high incidence of emaciation, feather-loss and back and head wounds.

If you want to avoid eating intensively farmed or cruelly slaughtered meat, the only way to be sure is not to eat meat at all.

Richard Mountford, Animal Aid

Archbishop needs his faith

ROBIN Gill failed to mention that under the watch of the Church of England, congregations have been disappearing like snow in the sun, Christianity has become marginalised and Christians are actually being persecuted for their faith. (KoS Opinion, December 12).

The response of the CoFE, like the Scribes and Pharisees, has been to obsess over trivia. They think they can run the CoFE like a business, telling God what they will and won't do, so as to appear modern and trendy.

Unless the new archbishop gets a grip on this dying religion, it will slide further into mediocrity and even more become a club representing the wishes of its members.

They should be reminded that 'Christian' means being a follower of Christ. Not a misrepresenter, contradictor, or counterfeiter.

Phil Granger, West Malling

Building for a bleaker future

THE latest planning minister has no qualms about concretising over the south east and indeed the rest of the country for more housing.

In an illiterate outburst he suggests houses are more beautiful than nature and having a garden is a moral right.

His extraordinary view is that ordinary people that wish to protect our natural heritage are selfish, and have nothing better to do than object to his outrageous proposals.

What kind of semi-detached world does he live in?

No one doubts the urgent need for new housing, but the problem is not with the shortage of land or planning permission.

There is plenty of brownfield land and developers are sitting on tens of thousands of undeveloped plots. The problem is the continuing economic crisis and the reluctance of banks to lend money.

The minister should ditch his think-tank mode and get out into the best garden of them all – our irreplaceable countryside.

If he experiences the true beauty of the natural world and our place in it, perhaps he will think twice about the irreparable damage not only to the countryside, but to the nation's very soul that his proposals would cause.

Terry Cload, Pembury

Still living in Dream-land?

I RECENTLY took some visitors on a nostalgic trip to Margate.

They had moved away from Kent many years ago.

They were delighted to see the brown tourism sign showing the way to Dreamland and, of course, were disappointed to find the site derelict.

However, the delightful new white Turner Contemporary gallery came as a big surprise – no brown signs or directions to this attraction.

Is Margate clinging to the hope Dreamland will recover, and that tourists will not want to visit the modern art gallery?

Wake up, and invest a bit in a few new signposts!

REST IN PIECES: Addington Long Barrow is one of two Neolithic chamber tombs found in the village

No place like home for uncovering village life

By Chrissie Daniels

chrissie.daniels@archant.co.uk

IT WOULD be easy to overlook Addington; a pretty village which nestles between Wrotham Heath and West Malling.

But it boasts a long, remarkable and rich history – dating back to the first recorded settlers arriving in 5,000 BC.

And now the story of Addington has been told in by local resident Patricia Richardson.

Ms Richardson's book Addington: The Life Story of a Kentish Village takes the reader on a journey from the village's early beginnings up to the present day. And it was her own home's connections with Admiral Horatio Nelson that inspired her to write the book.

Ms Richardson lives in the former home of Royal Navy Captain William Locker.

Locker was Nelson's 'sea daddy', assigned to look after the historic figure and who struck up an immediate friendship.

When Locker died in 1800, Nelson came to Addington for his funeral.

Ms Richardson said her interest in her home's past soon spread to the village's history.

She said: "That's what happens when you start researching a village, you go down so many paths."

Referred to in the Domesday Book as Eddintune, Addington is best known for its two Neolithic chamber tombs. One is called the Addington Long Barrow and has been left badly damaged. The other, The Chestnuts, is about 100 metres away and has been better preserved.

During the 1957 excavation of The Chestnuts, nine cremated bodies were found at the forecourt of the tomb. It is thought they were thrown out so others could be brought in.

Although there is evidence to suggest the village was born as early as 5,000BC, in the book Ms Richardson explains how there is no direct evidence to say when the settlement of Addington began.

The village was given its name, Eddintune, from a family chief, Edda or Eadda.

'Inga' means people and 'tun' means settlement enclosed by a fence or hedge.

The book explores the history of the Watton dynasty, who owned Addington Manor and controlled the village from the 14th to 19th century.

The first Wattons to make a home in the village were Robert and Alice.

The family gradually acquired neighbouring properties throughout the years.

Ms Richardson tells how the family endured everything from religious upheavals, rebellions and harsh agricultural conditions.

The last of the Wattons, Edward John Wingfield-Stratford, died in Bedfordshire in 1903, at the age of 53. He was buried in Addington.

By the time the estate was broken up in the early 1920s it covered 2,400 acres of land, homes, shops and a number of local villages including the centre of West Malling.

The final chapters of the book explore how Addington has developed up until 2012.

Among the pieces of history includes the story of how, in 1953, a television was set up in the village hall for the community to watch the coronation of Queen Elizabeth II.

The author relives the creation of the parish council, cricket club and recreation ground and even how the village celebrated this year's Diamond Jubilee.

Ms Richardson explains in the foreword to the book: "This life story is about generations of Addington's families as they raised their children and crops, built and enhanced their church and administered their parish. It tells how the soil determined how the land was worked."

"I have brought the village story up to date by recording how the community created, social, political, religious and recreational organisations. And of course the life story continues."

■ To purchase the book call Ms Richardson on 01732 842303 or visit the website www.kentlibraryshop.co.uk. The book costs £14, plus £3 post and packaging.

THE INTERVIEW

Shane Lynch

Panto casts its spell on Shane

Joe Bill talks to the Boyzone star who has turned from Prince Charming into one wicked wizard

THE music industry could not move for boy bands in the Nineties, but the genuinely successful ones who produced hit record after hit record were a little harder to find.

In the UK and Ireland there were three that dominated. The self-implosion East 17, the hit-machine known as Take That and the lads from the emerald isle, Boyzone.

The Irish contingent bagged 18 Top 10 hits in the UK charts, including six No 1 singles and five No 1 albums. That's a lot, by any standards.

So it's fair to say that Boyzone member Shane Lynch has seen the very highest points to which being in a boy band can take you.

But after his bad-boy image got the better of him in the late 90s, Lynch turned to other skills as well as finding a new passion... God.

After admitting he got a little too deep into Ouija boards, "the dark side" and the occult at the end of his boy-band days, Lynch was baptised a Christian in 2003 and this helped him put his efforts into developing both his motor-racing and acting careers.

The singer stars in the pantomime Aladdin at the Stag arts centre in Sevenoaks, playing the part of evil wizard Abanazar.

He said: "I've never done panto as a bad guy – I think I've done seven shows as the prince.

"I've had it easy for six years. The first time, you have to get to know the part, but after that they're pretty much the same. So I was pretty comfortable. When I was offered this role, I realised I sat much more comfortably with this than I ever did as a prince.

"It's really quite enjoyable. I never got to enjoy the stage before. When it comes to the love story between the prince and the princess, it's quite serious and you can't have laughable moments because you're telling the story.

"This is the first time I've got a bit of freedom and I feel a lot less pressurised. In rehearsals I'm laughing and joking – it's quite fluid and easy, so I'm really looking forward to it.

"I can be direct, stern and then able to break character and have banter before getting back into the evilness of Abanazar."

Lynch lives a short distance from Sevenoaks, in West Sussex, and was delighted to accept the role so close to his home and wife and daughter.

"Last year was the first year I spent away from my family doing panto and I said I would never do it again, so when this role came up it meant I could jump out of bed and nearly be here, especially when it comes to Christmas and transport and all that."

The 36-year-old has also confirmed another tour with his Boyzone counterparts in 2013 to coincide with the 20th anniversary of the band's creation: "We're meeting up pretty soon to get in the studio and make a new album for our 20 years of Boyzone."

"I believe we're going to remix 10 old songs and 10 new songs as a 20-track album then tour later next year. We'll have to talk about it all because if we tour November and December I will pretty much miss out on panto stuff. Most people will think 'So what? You're going on tour!', but I've only missed one year of panto since 2003 and I didn't like it.

"Far from being blessed with being raised in stage schools, I was just a lucky guy, so when I get offered these opportunities I feel very honoured and I want to continue that."

But does the now family man miss being with the group full-time?

"I think it was 2007 when we first came back – we then went on tour in 08, 09, 10 and 11, so I think this year just gone is the only one we haven't toured, so I still had the freedom of touring with the lads.

"But we don't travel in a tour bus any more – we all travel separately.

We all have our own tour managers and security for the simple reason that we are busy guys. There was one tour I was qualifying in the British Drift Championship [motor-racing] during the day and getting a helicopter to the venue that night. I was doing a gig and then getting a helicopter back in the morning.

"If we're on a tour bus, that's almost impossible. Everyone has a very individual life on tour. But as long as we're there for half past seven to put the clothes on and get on stage, then everything is fine.

"The evenings generally consist of us hanging around together all night anyway. So it's good, it's a nice life."

After stints in reality TV shows like Celebrity Love Island and The Games, in which he took home the gold medal, Lynch divides his time between acting and motorcar-racing. He has already starred in Sky One drama Dream Team and a number of stage shows, but it is something he has to push himself to achieve.

"One of the biggest problems for me is auditions. I won't audition, but only because it frightens the heck out of me. It's a weird thing to say, but I'm dyslexic so the general aspect of giving me a script to read from freaks me out.

"I enjoyed the few years of Dream Team I did, but I pushed myself hard to do it. When I was in the moment, I could do it, but when I got out of it, it was like a release.

"The thing I love about panto – yes it's a pressurised time to learn scripts, but it's not West End and not that serious."

In his spare time Lynch has become one of the most revered drift-car-racers around and is looking to continue his driving career next year with a move into UK rallyingcross.

"I'm almost looking to come out of drifting now. I've almost gone as far as I can with it. I'm ranked in the top five in Europe and I drive at all the biggest shows around the UK.

"You can't go any further with drifting unless you head to the States. Over there, it's a million pound a season and you're into big sponsorships and it gets very, very serious. I almost got out of motorsport back in the day when I raced British GTs because it got too serious and there was big money involved. I didn't enjoy it any more and my life is always about enjoyment."

As a side project the Boyzone man has also turned businessman, having got involved with companies like Prestige Wrap – a car-wrapping company that uses vinyl to customise any vehicle – as well as Ver2 Vodka, the UK's first energy vodka.

But for now Lynch is happy to push on with his solo projects in music and racing as well as rejoin Boyzone one more time. And panto is pretty high on his list, too.

"You're still the same guy no matter if it's in front of 20,000 people or 800, and no matter what you're doing on that stage."

■ Aladdin plays at The Stag Community Arts Centre, Sevenoaks, until Sunday, January 6, 2013. Tickets cost £17 for adults, £15 for children and £46 for families. Visit www.sevenoakspanto.com or phone 01732 450175 to book.

HAPPY TO BE WHAT IT IS: The Waggon at Hale is a warm and jolly country pub hosted by a friendly team

Join Crackling and the gang down at the festive Waggon

IT'S going to be a real cracker of a Christmas this year with the delicious menu at the Waggon at Hale.

The Waggon is a well-run family pub with good food, good wines and good beers and a very friendly, relaxed atmosphere.

There is always plenty going on at the Waggon, with themed nights, quizzes, charity events and live music.

Families are always welcome and in the pub's big family-friendly garden there is even a mini farm with chickens, guinea pigs, rabbits and, of course, the star of the show, Crackling the miniature pig.

Proprietor Emma Pearson said: "We do not try to be anything more than what we already are – a warm and friendly country pub serving real food and drink, selected, prepared and served to you by our friendly team."

Up until Sunday, December 23, the Waggon is offering its pre-Christmas menu priced at £22.95 per person.

That price includes a starter, a main course and a dessert from an excellent range of puddings, including traditional Christmas pudding, chocolate brownies, tasty French apple tart or, for the ultra-sweet-lovers out there, the raspberry-and-white chocolate cheesecake brûlée. But the choice, it goes without saying, is up to you!

An example of the menu could include a starter from the tomato-and-basil soup, the deep-fried Brie, the duck-and-orange pâté or even the prawn-and-crayfish salad.

For the main course you could go with the traditional roast turkey or roast topside of Scottish beef with all the vegetables and trimmings.

For something a little different, try the mushroom-and-chestnut-stuffed plaice or the vegetarian stuffed red peppers.

The Hawkenbury knows how to party

RUSSELL and Lesley Sparkes, the landlord and landlady of The Hawkenbury Inn near Staplehurst, have a unique way of taking on the current recession.

For the fourth year in a row the pair have had the eatery painted with a huge Christmas mural that covers the entirety of the outside walls.

Every festive season The Hawkenbury look is designed by local artist Dean Tweedy, of Marvellous Murals, providing a really eye-catching scene for locals, tourists and all forms of passing trade.

Russell said: "Every year we see hundreds of new customers around this time that just pop in because they have never seen a pub painted in this way.

"It's an excellent form of promotion for us each Christmas and the children love it. Dean does a superb job every time and we have great fun selecting the theme each year."

The mural stays up until mid-January, when the pub is repainted again in more traditional colours. The Hawkenbury Inn offers home-cooked food with ingredients locally grown and reared where possible and also offers Christmas parties for up to 200 guests.

The private function room is also available for wedding receptions and business meetings, with fresh food served daily between midday and 10pm.

There is a full à la carte menu, with changing daily specials to coincide with the seasons. The Sunday roast is very popular and always well attended, so booking is advised.

Monday-night deals offer two main courses for the price of one and there is also a steak night on Wednesdays for just £9.95.

A venue with good reason to be confident, whatever the season

It's perhaps a sign of ultimate confidence in your abilities as a restaurant that you feel no need to make culinary concession to the Christmas festivities, maybe some sparkly decorations aside. So it is that diners at the Minster Tandoori in Thanet will not be faced with the dubious delights of, say, turkey shashlik, pigs-in-blankets bhuna or bubble-and-squeak samosas (although there's a thought!).

No, the Minster Tandoori is happy to set its stall by what it does year on year, month on month, day on day.

That it is able to do so is doubtless down to its handsome reputation, one that extends way beyond the village itself.

It is also a must-visit for many of those who spend their summers or weekends at the nearby holiday park – this is a restaurant that is clearly doing something right.

And do it right it must. The competition here is strong... and growing. Minster is not, thankfully, a large village, yet, in addition to the tandoori, it can boast two restaurant-cum-bistros, two Chinese eateries, three pubs serving food, a fish-and-chip restaurant and a kebab house, the last two relatively recent additions to the line-up. At the top of the hill, amid the unlovely sprawl that has grown up around the garage, lurk a McDonald's and a Table Table. This is a place where self-discipline is a vital component of the psyche if you're to keep both the waist and the overdraft under some kind of control.

But eat we must... and here I want to tell you about something rather special. It's called murgh masala, and it's done exceptionally well at the Minster Tandoori.

As is often the way with Indian food in the UK, there is a variety of opinion regarding the precise components of the dish. What does seem accepted, though, is that murgh masala means simply 'spicy chicken'. Accordingly, in some restaurants this is just another chicken choice, although in others it entails lamb mince with tandoori-chicken (drumsticks work best). It is the latter approach that is taken at Minster.

The combination of the mince (or 'keema') and the spiced chicken in the distinctively-flavoured sauce is enough on its own to place this dish in my personal top 10, but it is the addition of the humble hard-boiled egg that takes it to another place.

An under-used technique, this, and certainly there's a time and a place for it, but an egg can so often lift a curry to a higher level.

Although this was a visit dominated by one very special dish, the supporting cast has always to step up to the plate if the entire experience is to be top-drawer.

Reshmi kebab (another role for the egg!) to start the whole thing off; keema naan and sag aloo as sides... yes, Minster Tandoori had got it right from start to finish. If you're wanting a break from more traditional Christmas fare in the coming weeks, then stride out to this excellent restaurant. Happy Christmas!

STUFFED AND SPOILT is the name of a web-based company specialising in Kentish food.

It is the brainchild of Ashleigh Jenkins and was launched in 2011 after an idea she had following discussions with a friend who was looking for a locally-produced gift to send.

The website enables customers to order produce not available in stores that can then be despatched along with a gift card.

Ashleigh, from Rochester, said: "I started by sourcing Kent food- and drink-producers, visiting them at farms, homes, farmers' markets and small shops, buying and tasting samples.

"I eventually had a website professionally designed and I wanted to create a brand with a 'country life' feel to reflect the quality of the products I chose to sell.

"I also wanted the brand to be fun and memorable, which was how I thought of the name.

"The majority of suppliers are small cottage industries and make their produce by hand. I spent time designing hampers and gifts with the purchaser in mind, trying to create gifts for any occasion.

"I found my first Christmas quite busy and definitely a learning curve and am still working on ways to improve the business further."

The last order date for Christmas is Wednesday, December 19... the hampers are proving particularly popular!

Chancellor misses chance to give SMEs a real boost, says disappointed analyst

By Nick Ames

nick.ames@archant.co.uk

CHANCELLOR George Osborne has missed the chance to boost the economy by helping small and medium-sized businesses, according to a financial analyst.

Nigel Stanford, of Tunbridge Wells accountancy Cripps Harries Hall, said SMEs had needed more from Osborne's Autumn Statement to promote growth.

However, some aspects of the address to MPs have drawn praise from both business and politics – such as the cut in corporation tax and the scrapping of a proposed rise in fuel duty.

Stanford said: "My feeling is that although there are some welcome elements in the Autumn Statement, many SMEs would have been looking for something more radical to give them a boost – for example a holiday from business rates.

"Clearly the reduction in corporation-tax rates will be welcomed, as will the increase in the annual investment allowance.

"That said, if you are an SME who is feeling locked out of the bank lending market, whether you can raise the cash necessary to make the investment that qualifies for the increased allowance must be debatable.

"For the smaller end of the SME market, arguably the most welcome piece of news will be the cancellation in the 3p per litre rise in fuel duty as this was due to have had an immediate and unwelcome impact upon their cost bases."

The Chancellor admitted Britain would miss its targets on reducing the national debt but insisted the economy was "slowly healing".

He said the economy was taking longer than expected to recover and the deficit was "far too large for comfort" because of the debt crisis in Europe.

Osborne will also cut corporation tax further to just 21 per cent, compared with 40 per cent in the US and 33 per cent in France.

The changes to income tax mean more people will have to pay the 40p tax rate because he is raising the earnings threshold by just 1 per cent to £41,865 in 2014 and £42,285 in 2015 – below the current rate of inflation. This move will save the Treasury about £1 billion.

On pensions, the tax-free allowance will be cut from £1.5 million to £1.25 million over a lifetime from 2014 onwards. The annual allowance will be cut from £50,000 to £40,000.

Although small businesses can be grateful for some good news in George Osborne's Autumn Statement, more action is needed to spark a light at the end of the tunnel for the Kent economy, warns one county financial expert

The county's Federation of Small Businesses chairman Roger House said: "I'm impressed he [Osborne] cancelled the rise in fuel duty, and the cut in corporation tax is welcome.

"He has also helped people who are not earning a lot of money.

"In the case of the higher tax bracket I don't know how many people in the business community I am part of earn more than £41,000 – but I'm guessing it's not many.

"But the first thing I felt is just how grim it is economically – that the state we're in is a bit scary, I suppose."

Osborne said the country was "heading in the right direction" as he laid out spending and taxation plans.

He will cut Whitehall spending by at least 1 per cent – or £5 billion – but will not increase taxes overall as any rises will be offset by cuts elsewhere.

He said it was possible to "restore sanity to public finances" at the same time as improving public services.

"It's taking time, but the British economy is healing," he told MPs.

"People know there are no quick fix-

CHOP: From left, Chancellor George Osborne has scrapped the proposed fuel-duty increase, pleasing both Swale MP Gordon Henderson and the FSB's Roger House

es... but they want to know that we are making progress.

"We are making progress. It's a hard road, but we are getting there.

"Britain is on the right track and turning back now would be a disaster."

Fellow Conservative Party members were also positive.

Sittingbourne and Sheppey MP Gordon Henderson said: "In a week in which we have seen more job losses in my constituency, the decision to scrap the proposed 3p per litre planned for by the previous Labour government is a much-needed boost not only for private motorists but also hard-pressed firms.

"I was delighted to see many working people will next year see an income-tax cut and I know local businesses will welcome the other measure the Chancellor announced, including the drop in corporation tax and the small-business rate relief.

"Times are tough. But the economy is healing and the measures announced will bring welcome support to families and businesses in Sittingbourne and Sheppey."

Kent County Council's Mike Whiting, cabinet member for education, learning and skills, said: "I welcome the extra £1bn funding for education over the next two years. We all know there are pressures in the South East on school places and welcome any extra help which may be available for expanding existing schools or building new ones."

Sidcup accountancy McBrides said that while there was little to celebrate the news was not all bad.

McBrides tax partner Terry Baldwin said businesses could take heart from a tenfold increase in tax allowances on plant and machinery.

Paul Wookey, chief executive of Locate in Kent, said: "The cut in corporation tax from April 2014 will make the UK more attractive to overseas investment.

"Coupled with the announcement of increased funding for UK Trade and Investment [UKTI], this can only be good news for Kent. We have worked hard to build a strong relationship with UKTI, which is generating solid new leads for the county.

"With more funding and added incentives for companies to move here, it will make our case for converting those leads into real jobs even more compelling."

DECONSTRUCTION: A new timetable to take down the Dungeness A plant is set to save money and make up to 70 jobs at the site while work takes place

£12.8m grant brings end of Dungeness A (more) nigh

By Nick Ames

nick.ames@archant.co.uk

WORK on the decommissioning and demolition of Dungeness A nuclear power station will be speeded up through the award of a £12.8 million grant over the next three years.

The new timetable for the scheduled work could also create up to 70 jobs.

The south side of the site will be cleared in about three years, rather than the 15 years originally planned, providing the employment boost and reducing the overall cost of the project.

The skyline of Romney Marsh will be transformed dramatically as the 26-metre-high turbine halls are to be demolished.

David Batters, chief finance officer at the Nuclear Decommissioning Authority (NDA), made the announcement about the award during a visit to the site to see progress first-hand and take a look at the areas of the site that will be cleared as a result of the work.

He said: "We are delighted to make this funding available. The accelerated demolition work will deliver significant major savings in the long term while demonstrating visible progress in decommissioning the site."

Dungeness A site director Ray Jepps said: "This is excellent news for Dungeness A and the local area as it enables us to complete another milestone project along the site's journey towards care and maintenance and hazard-reduction."

"At its peak, the work will create an additional 70 jobs and secure employment for a number of staff at the site for the duration of the project."

Further savings are likely to be made through the sale of scrap metal and by avoiding the need for ongoing maintenance work on the ageing building, resulting in a saving of £15m over the current plan.

Magnox recently awarded a Framework Contract worth £304m for the de-planting, demolition and bulk asbestos removal across all its 10 nuclear-reactor sites in the UK.

By bringing together a number of related projects in this way, optimising the approach to decommissioning, it is expected that the UK taxpayer will save more than £1.3 billion.

The final flask of fuel was dispatched from Dungeness A for reprocessing in April this year, completing a five-year programme of defuelling that removed more than 99 per cent of the radioactive waste from the site.

TAX

Research produces an £84,000 rebate

CHRISTMAS has come (a little) early for a direct-marketing company, which has won an £84,000 refund from the taxman.

Lloyd James Ltd, based near Dartford, manage databases, lists and mailing campaigns on behalf of blue-chip clients such as Homebase, Debenhams and ACAS.

Problems arose when it invested in some new software to improve its service to a telecoms provider that needed several million records processed a day. Instead, it found itself with a product unfit for purpose – and set about devising its own.

Chief executive officer Lloyd James was delighted with the creation; he was then doubly thrilled when HMRC sent him a cheque for £84,000 in the shape of a research-and-development tax credit.

Sidcup accountancy McBrides spotted the opportunity to apply for a research-and-development tax credit when invited to sit in on a meeting at the firm.

James said: "I wasn't even aware there were tax credits available for research and development, so that came as a pleasant surprise. However, the cheque that finally came through last month from HMRC was even more of a delight."

McBrides worked with the Lloyd James team, identifying further information that was needed for the application and then compiled it all into a tax reclaim with a detailed synopsis of the software, which was submitted to HMRC.

Superfast broadband to go ahead for rural areas

A SUPERFAST broadband scheme worth £9.9 million in Kent and Medway has been given the green light by the European Commission.

Work to start laying cable can now start, which will mean improved internet speeds to homes and firms in the countryside.

CONNECTED: Internet speeds are to be improved

MEP Catherine Bearder said she urged the commission to free up the money amid fears delays to the scheme were starting to damage companies.

Bearder said: "Superfast broadband is crucial to build a strong economy, where everyone has the opportunity to make a success of their business."

"This will create jobs and growth for Kent and Medway and ensure we can compete fairly with the big cities."

"It is also very important for local and national government to deliver public services effectively online and to going about our everyday lives."

"For too long, our area has missed out on investment in broadband."

"I have always been clear we must not miss out on the digital age and I will be working with the Coalition Government and our local authority to ensure we deliver superfast broadband as soon as possible."

The European Commission permission was needed because the project was partially state-aided.

Grow For It... cheque out the good it can do

THE largest individual share of east Kent's £35 million from the Regional Growth Fund has been awarded.

Hythe-based HV Wooding has taken control of £1.1m in interest-free loans.

It was presented by county council leader Paul Carter at the launch of the Grow For It campaign – a project seeking to attract investment in the area.

The sub-contract manufacturing company supplies components to engineering firms, including the Mercedes Formula 1 team, nuclear researchers and renewable-energy specialists.

Formed 44 years ago, the firm employs 116 people and has an annual turnover of more than £13m.

Managing director Harry Wooding was at the east Kent regeneration-project launch, where the cheque was presented, along with colleagues Karl Dodd and John Osborne.

Wooding said: "Our industry is particularly capital-intensive and with competition coming from all points of the globe, as well as the UK, it is vital we continue to invest in the most advanced and productive equipment, so this loan opportunity is coming at exactly the right time for us as we are currently rebuilding and enlarging one of our production sites."

Osborne added: "We hope to create a further 16 jobs while safeguarding our existing workforce."

Bus scheme will fuel unemployed's hopes of work

JOBSEEKERS are going to be set to take advantage of free bus travel across the region next month as part of a push to help them secure employment.

Bus firm Stagecoach is backing a new 'Bus for Jobs' initiative to help jobseekers travel on all Stagecoach bus route during January.

Sir Brian Souter, chief executive of Stagecoach Group, said: "Bus for Jobs could make the vital difference for those who are struggling to get that first job or training place. In particular, I hope we can help more of our young people make a better start in life."

Transport minister Norman Baker said: "Good bus services play a huge role in boosting economic growth by helping people to access employment and training opportunities. I have been encouraging bus operators to look at the fare deals they can offer to young people looking for work, so I congratulate the operators that are doing so in January and look forward to seeing other offers in the future."

"This move will benefit the industry as well as jobseekers as young people are not only a key section of the market – they are the future of the local bus industry."

The scheme will be available to jobseekers who have been unemployed for between three months and one year. It is particularly targeted at young people for whom unemployment rates remain high. The scheme will cover holders of a JobCentre Plus travel discount card.

Fresh designs for college with creative course set for 2013

STUDENTS will get the chance to flex their creative muscles after a college confirmed it was set to roll out a new graphic design course.

It is hoped the course will inspire a new generation to grasp creative opportunities across a wide range of diverse industries.

MidKent College chiefs, which have campuses in both Maidstone and Medway, hope to capitalise on an increasing awareness of big brands cementing their image with carefully thought out and well designed campaigns with graphic design at their heart.

The opportunities are clear to see.

From web developers to fast food chains, the civil service and everywhere in between, there are few organisations in the world that would not benefit from the expertise of someone capable of bringing words and pictures to life.

And from January 2013, Mid-Kent College's Medway campus will be the place for budding graphic designers to take their first steps into a career with what college chiefs say present endless possibilities.

Nick Sermon, teaching and learning manager for art and design at MidKent College, explained: "Graphic designers play such an important role in developing the brands and products we use on a daily basis.

"It's a big area of employment and there are so many industries that need graphic designers."

"We are confident our new course will give students the start they need to embark on a really exciting career."

The Level 2 diploma in graphic design covers a wide range of techniques and processes within the profession, including digital art, printmaking, digital photography, typography and more.

Students who enrol on the course will also be able to get their hands on the most up-to-date software and hardware to ensure the skills they learn are exactly what employers are looking for.

Mr Sermon added: "There are few professions that open as many different doors as graphic design, which is why we are confident this new course will be well received."

"We also plan to launch the next rung on the ladder, the Level 3 extended diploma in graphic design, next September, to ensure there is a clear route of progression for those enrolled on the course."

Students interested in enrolling on the Level 2 diploma in graphic design can get a sense of

International partnership sees Swedish students stay in city

VISITING Swedish students bid farewell to Canterbury College this week at the end of a three month stay.

Nearly 40 social sciences students from Nacka Gymnasium have been studying English, history, art and drama in accordance with the Swedish national curriculum, at the college throughout the autumn term.

They made the 1,130 mile journey from their home town of Nacka, south east Sweden, in September.

Since then, they have been staying with local families and immersing themselves in Kentish life.

Natural sciences students from Nacka Gymnasium will arrive for a similar scheme in January.

Brian Jones, the college's higher education access, arts and education manager, said: "Studying here allows the young people from Nacka Gymnasium to improve their English and build their confidence."

"It's very important to them because they have an international outlook. It also means our own students can enjoy being part of a more diverse community. We are always pleased to have them."

Director of business development Mark Hill said: "It is relevant academically and socially to the Swedes and for our own students. We had particularly positive feedback when our food hall handmade and served Swedish meatballs – we got eight out of ten from some very discerning Swedish customers. It was really appreciated too."

Aprons from the classroom

GIFTS: It's all wrapped up

NORTH West Kent College fashion design students presented dementia patients at the Gravesham Place Day Centre with fidget aprons that they designed and made as part of their course.

The students researched the condition to gain an understanding of the illness before creating the product to benefit those at the centre.

Karen Fitzpatrick, fashion design lecturer at the college, said: "The students have done a great job at turning the idea of an apron into something that can be physically and mentally stimulating."

The students used bright colours that helps stimulate sensory and visual perception, including coordination. They used fabrics such as silk and velvet, while beads and buttons were added to the aprons to alleviate fidgeting and pacing; all common traits of dementia.

To find out about the course and others on offer, North West Kent College will stage an open day on March 5.

IF YOU must run a mid-size seven-seat people-carrier, then the Toyota Verso has been a smart choice for some time.

But that buying decision is even more of a no-brainer now that Japan's top car brand has made it look, well, interesting – a factor that usually eludes MPVs.

Toyota is having a shake-up anyway, with less navel-gazing about hybrids and more image-making with real-world cars better able to ward off those pushy Korean rivals Kia and Hyundai.

I've already raved about the stunning and inexpensive GT86 sports car, while the new Auris no longer looks like a sloppily-disguised successor to the worthy but dull Corolla.

And while the latest Verso is actually no more than a facelift of the car launched in 2009, it also shows evidence of the turnabout at Toyota.

In essence, it's the same well-made, reliable and highly-practical model that people know and love, but there's verve about the styling, largely thanks to the new corporate nose pioneered on the new Auris.

To be fair, it's hard to make a sexy car from something designed to cram in seven and seat them high, but the Verso now looks sleeker and lower without losing its established practicality.

Priced from a competitive £17,495, it arrives next month in a much-simplified eight-model/three-grade range – Active, Icon and Excel – another sign of clearer thinking at Toyota.

Middleweight Icon models are expected to top sales and these come well equipped with digital radio, cruise-control, rear privacy glass and retractable door-mirrors, but even the budget Active comes with front fogs, air-con, electric front windows and Hill-Start Assist Control.

Curiously, this slimline range includes a five-seat model, possibly to allow that attractive entry price, but it's best avoided as five-seater versions of predominantly seven-seat cars usually take a hammering at resale time. Besides, there's little to dislike about Toyota's fast-action Easy Flat folding system on the seven-seat version.

Toyota has worked hard to upgrade the interior. It was workmanlike and durable, but new trim materials, upholstery designs and other tweaks have worked some magic.

There wasn't much wrong with the powertrain options, though. As a big Verso selling point, these carry over with only slight adjustment to the 2.0 D-4D diesel, which now delivers extra low-down pulling power, quieter running and 10g/km fewer CO₂ emissions to take it below 130g/km.

I haven't driven it yet, but, as Toyota isn't trumpeting any dynamic changes, assume it remains one of the most balanced driving experiences in the MPV arena.

It's wrong to expect cars of this class to put a smile on your face, but the Verso at least keeps worry lines away, while refinement can only be better with that sleek new front end.

New heights for Toyota's Verso

POWER TO THE PEOPLE-CARRIER:

Toyota has made some subtle changes to its already-impressive seven-seat mini-MPV Verso that have improved the look of a car that now comes in an eight-model/three-grade range but still retains its practicality

... the stodgy image and handling of MPVs as a rule, but the Verso has become even more the mid-size seven-seater you can live with.

NOT SURE

... it will contribute much to Toyota's apparent bid to brush up its image, but, as a big-name brand in another arena might say, every little helps.

REALLY LIKE

... the dramatic effect the new Verso nose and other styling tweaks have made to the look of what it still a relatively high-sided vehicle.

Could Vauxhall's new Mokka become your cuppa coffee?

By Steve Loader

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

VAUXHALL'S new Mokka crossover-cum-SUV takes its name from a variety of coffee bean.

It may also show that General Motors (GM) and its German-based Opel sister have finally awoken and smelt the coffee; these twin brands now produce some classy products, including the stylish Insignia – European Car Of The Year 2009 – handsome three-door Astra GTC; soon-to-arrive Adam city car; and elegant Cascada convertible due in a few months.

Car of the moment, though, is the Mokka, a long-awaited true replacement for the Frontera, with which Vauxhall made hay during the 90s.

What the Frontera lacked in sophistication, it countered with rugged style and price, but it had been outclassed by the time the axe fell in 2003.

It was 2007 before Vauxhall followed up with the Antara, but this was pitched upmarket and has never had the Frontera's price appeal.

And Nissan had rethought the 4x4/SUV deal with the Qashqai, creating the new crossover-car segment.

Belatedly, Vauxhall has now responded with the Mokka, a car to tackle the Qashqai set as well as a smaller crossover niche that Nissan has tried to prise open with its Juke model.

The Mokka's muscular, compact body has short overhangs but lots of height, so the cabin never feels cramped, although it struggles to seat three in comfort across the back.

It's also well-spec'd and aggressively priced from £15,995, and that entry price doesn't buy an asthmatic poverty spec offered simply to build showroom traffic; it's actually the lead-in to Tech Line trim aimed at tax-conscious company-car user-choosers though still available to private buyers.

And there's the essence of the Mokka: it's a crowd-pleaser.

OK, the marketeers talk about the Mokka's appeal to those with active lifestyles who want 4x4

SOMETHING BREWING:

Vauxhall's new Mokka should make an impact on Nissan's dominance of the crossover sector – a 4x4/SUV that is just as nimble about town as it is off-road and maybe the brand's retractable bumper-mounted FlexFix bike-carrier.

But many more buyers will happily pilot this nimble car around town rather than yomping across the countryside, which 4x4 Mokka versions can do up to a point, aided by a hill-descent control feature.

So, more than half of Mokka-buyers are expected to opt for front-wheel-drive versions and the greater economy.

Still with running costs in mind, Vauxhall has forecast that 42 per cent of buyers will opt for the 1.7CDTi diesel, with an official combined cycle 62.8mpg in front-wheel-drive format.

The balance will be petrol: a 1.4-litre turbo-charged (20 per cent) and 1.6-litre (38 per cent). After test-driving the former, though, I wouldn't bet against it selling more than its share.

It's available only as a 4x4, but there aren't many light, practical and sporty yet frugal small 4x4s – the official combined cycle consumption figure is 44.1mpg.

The turbo gives low-down urge and that complements a taut chassis that Vauxhall tuned specifically for the UK, evident in the fluid nature with which the car tackles a challenging road.

There's also a surprisingly good feel to the power-steering.

Unfortunately, Vauxhall seemingly couldn't eliminate a degree of leaning on the bends without harming the car's decent ride, but it's the Mokka's tiny weakness in the driving department.

Vauxhall has created some great interiors lately, but the Mokka doesn't further the brand's ambitions; there are no obvious examples of Vauxhall's thoughtful and versatile 'Flex' packaging features and the optimistically-named mid-range Exclusiv trim of the test car is drab.

However, occupants enjoy a high perch and good views out, while everything feels sturdy and works well, and access front and back is impressive.

So, Vauxhall appears to have brewed a wake-up call for the Qashqai and Co.

MOTORING NEWS

A fourth to be reckoned with

DIVERGENCE between recent generations of the BMW 3-Series saloon and its two-door sister is recognised by this preview of the new 4-Series, a stand-alone coupé and convertible 3-Series spin-off expected in 2013.

The German premium marque says it wants the newcomer to have its own aesthetic, sporting and dynamic identity – this racy concept certainly looks the part.

Stalwart 4x4 given facelift

ONE of the best-buy 4x4s on the market has had a facelift and arrives in Suzuki showrooms this month.

The Grand Vitara remains a fresh-looking and capable off-roader at a bargain price (from £15,995), but the Japanese marque has tweaked the three-/five-door range visually inside and out and boosted the diesel powertrain for what may be a tough winter for UK drivers.

Van victories for Vauxhall

VAUXHALL was top van brand at the 2013 What Van? Awards, though Ford's Transit Custom took Van Of The Year overall.

Vauxhall accolades were: Best Small Van – the Corsavan (pictured); Best Light Van – the Cargo and its Fiat Doblo clone sister; Best Innovation – Ecoflex technology; and Highly Commended Large Van – the Movano and its Nissan and Renault sister models.

WINNING WAYS: The impressive Generation Seven VW Golf stretches all the way back to a range that first came to the public's attention in 1974

Gen-7 Golf drives straight to top award

By Steve Loader

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

IT IS not just a feat to win a major award before a car is launched but a real coup when the accolade comes from the highly-opinionated BBC Top Gear camp.

In this case it's the magazine arm of the TV show, but you can be sure Messrs Clarkson, Hammond and May stand by making the latest Volkswagen Golf the first-ever 'All The Car You'll Ever Need Car Of The Year' winner in the Top Gear Magazine Awards 2012.

Comment on the verdict included: "Stopped or on the move, it feels like it's made of stronger materials than the hatches of other nations. Top and bottom: a Golf is no more car than you need, yet it can be all the car you want."

"It's right-sized for the city and nimble in the country. Yet at normal motorway speed, a Golf is more relaxed than many big-tyred luxury barges."

Praise indeed for a car still a few weeks away from launch, but every one of the previous six generations of Golf pushed the envelope in car design and engineering, even if the 1974 original owed much to the old Auto Union brand that later became Audi.

VW had fortuitously acquired the concern in the early 1960s after former owner Daimler – home of Auto Union's erstwhile racing rival Mercedes-Benz – decided it didn't need the firm's technologically-challenged cars and outmoded two-stroke engines.

But Daimler's loss proved to be a massive gain for VW: Auto Union had been developing an efficient, small-capacity, four-stroke, water-cooled engine. Several eye-catching new front-wheel-drive models followed, including the Audi 50 supermini (1974), which became pivotal for VW.

By the early 1970s, the company's drive from post-war basket case to one of new Germany's industrial giants was slipping into reverse; as Henry Ford did with the Model T, VW had persisted with the air-cooled rear-engine Beetle for too long and sales were plummeting without a successful replacement emerging.

And then the penny dropped: the Audi 50 was plundered as the basis of the first Golf and also rebadged as the keenly-priced VW Polo, allowing VW to move on from the Beetle era.

The Golf is now the German car giant's biggest-selling car model ever. Generation Seven is priced from £16,285 and said to be lighter, safer and more advanced, spacious, efficient and better equipped than previous generations.

The S, SE and GT versions arrive next month, with the GTI sporting icon and most eco-efficient BlueMotion models due later in 2013, the latter being of most interest to high-mileage business users, since private buyers will rarely cover enough miles to make the fuel savings needed to recoup the higher purchase price.

Significantly, VW now sees small turbo-charged petrol engines as a viable alternative to diesels and the 140PS (139bhp) turbocharged 1.4-litre petrol with Active Cylinder Technology (ACT) offers 60.1mpg on the combined cycle and just 110 g/km of CO₂ emissions when combined with VW's excellent DSG (twin-clutch manual/auto) gearbox. This is made possible by the engine automatically deactivating two cylinders when driven sensibly.
